- Practical strategies for working more effectively with local staff
- A toolkit for developing best practice for HR in Asia-Pacific

Who should attend?

Anyone who is:

- About to relocate to the Asia-Pacific region
- Remotely managing teams based in Asia-Pacific
- Working in the UK with expatriates from the region
- A specialist in international assignments or relocation

Programme Content

- Cultural framework: individual country profiles; cultural drivers affecting working practices; local communication styles
- Expectations and perceptions in the HR arena
- Managing people and conducting business
- HR in practice: key HR practices across Asia-Pacific; regulatory framework, benefit structures; recruitment practices
- Exploring commonalities and differences to develop best practice HR solutions
- Skills and strategies for successful HR practice

Although often grouped together as a collective region, every Asian-Pacific country has its own identity and culture, each presenting its own set of opportunities and challenges. For human resources professionals tasked with maximising competitive advantage through the management of human and intellectual resources, this means coming to terms with individual local HR practices.

Understanding how your methods will impact on the local workforce and how you will need to adapt your approach to the local environment are just two of the factors needed to be taken into consideration.

'HR Issues in Asia-Pacific' offers you an ideal introduction to the countries of the region from an HR perspective and a springboard for discussion of the complex cultural and regulatory issues faced by international HR professionals working with this region today.
